35 Gozde Tuncbilek. Lines connecting key areas of the site are transcribed into a performative device, an association device, through which two people can whisper to one another from afar. Then this is transcribed into a series of design interventions of the shared space outside the Brunel Museum.

The first prototype of the Association Device, featured on the cover page of the catalogue.

The spatial intervention is derived from body extensions, experiments, and prototypes.

Gozde Tuncbilek experiments with body extension, representing the concept of time between reality and imagination. She skillfully plays with time, seamlessly transitioning between the past, present, and future.
